By:Ryder M.

Once upon a time there were two boys named Romulus and Remus. They had a father, the god Mars, and their mother was Rhea Silvia. They lived in King Latium's kingdom. Then, one day their evil uncle, the king, got extremely jealous and felt threatened by the boys. He knew one day the two twins would get the crown. He knew something had to be done. He did not want to lose his power.

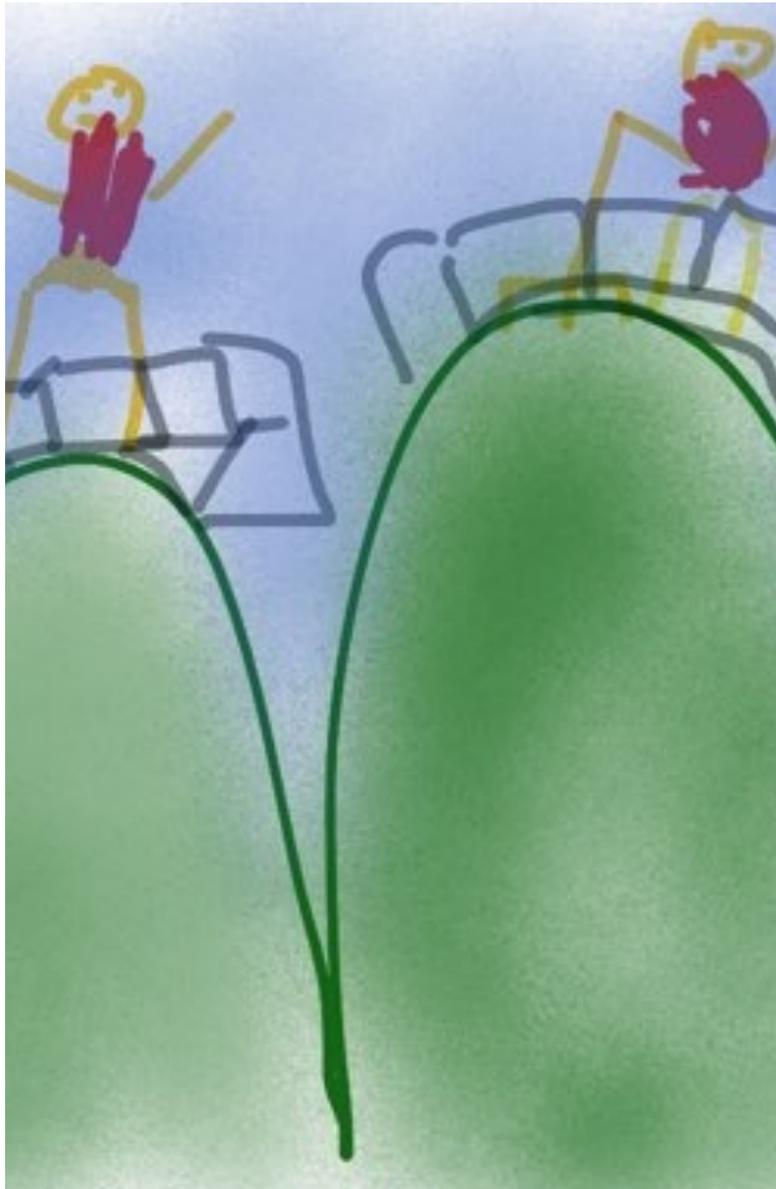

So their evil uncle sent a servant to drown the two twins in the Tiber river. But the servant did not want to. So then he snuck a basket and brought them to the Tiber river. The servant didn't see the boys as a threat. So the servant put the babies in the basket and then they went floating down the Tiber River. Legend says that the Roman God Tiberinus/Neptune carried the two boys down the river safely. Eventually, they washed up on shore.

Then a mother wolf was going to the river to get a drink then she saw the two boys in the basket by the river. Soon after she went over and dragged the basket back to her den. One day a farmer saw the two boys and the wolf. After the wolf put them in the basket and dragged them to the farmer.

Then the farmer took the boys and raised them big and strong. One day the two boys heard about their uncle and got revenge. After that the two boys decided to build a city but they were separate cities. One brother wanted to build on one hill and the other wanted to build on the other hill. So the the two brothers built separate city's. Days later Remus stepped over the wall in a mean way like Romulus had a horrible wall. Romulus got extremely mad and they started fighting. After Remus fell to the ground dead. Immediately Romulus burst into tears saying "I never meant to hurt him",then he kept whimpering. After Romulus kept on building and he named the city Rome. Since then Rome is one of the most famous city's thanks to Romulus and Remus.
